

What Every Teacher Should Know for Bringing out the Best from their Students

November 6-8, 2019

Programme Co-ordinator: Prof. Hitesh Bhatt

About the Programme

When young people, seemingly without reason, refuse to learn what adults are so unselfishly and altruistically willing to teach them, teaching is anything but exhilarating. In fact, it can be a miserable experience leading to feelings of inadequacy, hopelessness, sheer exasperation—and, too frequently, deep resentment toward the unwilling and ungrateful learner.

What makes the difference between teaching that works and teaching that fails, teaching that brings rewards and teaching that causes pain? Certainly, many different factors influence the outcome of one's efforts to teach another. But one factor contributes the most—namely, the degree of effectiveness of the teacher in establishing a particular kind of relationship with students.

Objectives

This programme is designed to help a teacher become more confident in handling classroom sessions. This programme is also aimed at helping a teacher to add value for students during teaching-learning processes.

Benefits of the Programme

The participants, after returning back, will be more confident in handling their sessions with the students. They will be able to add value and help students grow further. After returning from the training, the teachers are likely to earn more respect from the students, peers, and seniors.
